COURONNE D'OR

INTRODUCTION

We take pardonable pride and considerable pleasure in offering to the discriminating flower lover, the following exceptionally comprehensive selection of the distinctive and best in peonies and irises.

The landscape architect and novice will find varieties which are the equal for massing and garden value of many of the new and rare varieties. These have been in cultivation long enough to permit the propagation of considerable stock and hence sale at nominal prices.

The connoisseur, advanced amateur and collector will find practically all of the better very recent introductions of European and American hybridists.

Anticipating frequent requests, for shorter lists of the very finest without regard to price, we indicate in capitals those varieties which are the very finest; the cream of the list which means the finest varieties in the world. It has been our custom to list the new varieties we are testing but of which a too limited stock does not permit sale. We have imported most every available new variety of peony and iris produced by the European hybridists and such as have survived our climate are now growing. The number has now become so very extensive that we shall not in the present list include these varieties as a mere matter of record. We are pleased to enter into correspondence reference new varieties not here listed and quote prices on such as our stock and Federal importation restrictions permit.

"We know of no grower with a standard as high who issues a list as comprehensive." On the other hand, we have never seen a commercial list as concise and deluxe as that comprised by the varieties we list in capitals.

THE PEONY

Varieties are described in accord with the publications of the American Peony Society as follows:

1. Name of the variety.
2. Rating as to desirability being the average vote of the members of the society and published in Bulletin 14, under date of May, 1921. A vote of ten was established as perfection and of five or under as not being worth growing. We list very few varieties rated under eight.
3. Name of hybridizer or introducer.
4. Date of commercial introduction.

There are eight types, shapes or formations of the peony:

Single—Albiflora, Clio.

Japanese—Isani-Gidui, Ama no sode, Fuyajo.

Semi-double—Marie Jacquin. Lady A. Duff.

Anemone—Primevere.

Crown—Octavie Demay.

Bomb—Felix Crousse, Mons.. Jules Elie.

Semi-rose—Mons. Martin Cahuzac. Couronne d'Or.

Rose—Festiva Maxima. Solange.

Aside from yellow and white we have some varieties approaching yellow, it is still one of the new things in store for us, there are five general shades or colors.

White—Festiva Maxima. Couronne d'Or.

Pale or Flesh Pink—Octavia Demay. Pierre Duchartre.

Dark Pink—Mons. Jules Elie. Claire Dubois.

Red—Felix Crousse. Karl Rosenfield.

Cream—Primevere. Laura Dessert.

In addition to the above, varieties should be selected to cover the full blooming season in the various colors; early, mid-season and late. As to these matters, we are always pleased to enter into correspondence, make suggestions, ec.

Plant peony roots so that the "eyes" are two inches below the surface. Too deep planting is the cause of more peonies not blooming than all other causes combined.

Single and Japanese

The single and Japanese varieties are of upright habit of growth, and being of lighter weight and such form as not to retain water, are not beaten down by storms. This fact with their massing habit of bloom and effectiveness of the flower in shape and color makes them unsurpassed for landscape use.

To those who prefer the simple and unassuming, the single varieties make a strong appeal. Those who seek the unusual will find the Japanese type of special interest and value. They give variety to a collection of peonies and the garden in general and while novel and unique are in no respect freakish.

THE IRIS

TALL LILY — FLEUR-DE-LIS

The iris is botanically divided into two general classes:

1. Those varieties having rhizomes or root stocks.
2. Those varieties having a bulbous root.

Both of these general classes have several sub-divisions. We grow only those of the first class and but two of its sub-classes.

Pogoniris—Those varieties characterized by a distinct beard down the center of each fall, commonly called “bearded irises” and incorrectly also termed “German” iris.

Apogon—Those varieties having smooth or beardless falls, known as “beardless irises.” The Japanese, Siberian and Pseudo-acorus varieties are of this group.

The bearded irises are those most generally grown, and consequently the best known. This group contains a vast number of varieties. Of necessity, many must be inferior and but comparatively few really distinctive varieties. It is our desire to eliminate and restrict our list rather than to work toward volume.

Tall Bearded Iris

Varieties are described in a manner similar to that used for the peony:

1. Name of variety.
2. Rating of the variety as to desirability being the average vote of a jury composed of twenty-three members of the American Iris Society as published in Bulletin 5 of the Society under date of May, 1922.

Beardless Irises

APAGON

These irises occupy a position similar to the Japanese and single peonies. They are not known and therefore not as generally planted as they should be. To know them is to appreciate their beauty. They do well in a moderately moist location; use no lime as they prefer an acid soil.

CULTURE

Pogoniris require a well drained soil. Water standing over the roots for any considerable length of time will cause rot. Very rich soil is neither necessary nor desirable and fresh manure in direct contact with the roots is very injurious. Bone meal is a safe fertilizer to use and in the limited quantity required, quite economical and convenient to handle. Pulverized limestone is very beneficial and can be used in liberal quantity. While the iris will survive under greater neglect and abuse than any other plant of which we know, it appreciates good treatment, and cultivation is necessary for the plants to produce their flowers in profusion and perfection. Plant the roots shallow, "as a duck rides the water.."

The roots appear to enjoy, in fact, require for best results, not only a well drained soil but a warm, open location. For this reason, we do not advise interplanting with other plants or ground covers as the surface creeping rhizomes do best on direct exposure to the sun. We advise planting in August and September, though as in the case of the peony, planting may be done until freezing of the ground prevents. Planting may also be done in early July after flowering, provided the roots are not permitted to dry out.

Both Peonies and Irises are listed in the respective groups according to general color effect and in the order in which they bloom.

WE MAKE NO SPRING SHIPMENTS

We start shipping peonies about September 10th. irises about July 10th. Orders are filled in rotation as received. Early orders are insurance against disappointment due to stock being depleted and also obtain earlier delivery to you.

We cater to that rapidly increasing number of flower lovers who have reached the conclusion that a choice variety takes no more space, fertilizer or care than a mediocre one and that the increased pleasure and satisfaction more than justifies the additional first cost. Have you thought of the situation from that viewpoint; that it is really your limited planting area and time which are important, rather than the first cost of the plant?
