Iris

Our introductions are distinctly unique - not more of the same. All have been tested several years in our garden. They represent products of a scientifically planned and controlled breeding program emphasizing vigor, hardiness, beauty and uniqueness. The newer ones are on display at the National convention of the American Iris Society.

ON TETRAPLOIDS

The usual daylily is a diploid having two sets of chromosomes. The chromosomes are made up of genetic material (DNA) that determines the characteristics of a plant or organism.

A tetraploid has four of these sets of chromosomes. Most tets have stiffer leaves, stems and flowers. The flowers are thicker and resist wilting better. This is true in most cases. They vary as in the diploids in every respect.

Many people have let their emotions color their thinking on this subject. The TETRAPLOIDS listed in this catalog have been carefully selected primarily for their fine garden qualities. They are as good as the best diploids and better than most.

For the hybridizer, some pertinent facts have been included in the descriptions. If you do hybridize, those found in this catalog are the best available base stock from the outstanding developers and originators in the world.
